'I'M NOT A VICTIM, BABY. YOU WILL NEVER SEE ME ON OPRAH... CRYING' —CHRIS ROCK, on moving on after Will Smith (inset, with Jada) slapped him at the 2022 Oscars

Chris Rock Strikes Back at Will Smith a Year Later

By ERIC ANDERSSON

Chris Rock came out swinging at Will Smith and Jada Pinkett Smith in his live March 4 Netflix special, Chris Rock: Selective Outrage—and he "isn't worried" about the reaction, says an industry source. Nearly a year after getting slapped by the Emancipation actor, 54, at the 94th Academy Awards, the comic, 58, repeatedly called Will a "bitch," while implying the star had misplaced anger stemming from past marital problems with Jada, 51.

"Will Smith practices selective outrage," said Rock, who was attacked by Will onstage at the Oscars last March after he joked about Jada's shaved head due to alopecia. "Everybody that really knows, knows I had nothing to do with that s---. I didn't have any 'entanglements,'" he said, referring to Jada's 2020 revelation on her show Red Table Talk that she once had >> an "entanglement" with singer August Alsina when she and Will were on a break. Will appeared in the episode to talk about it.

"Everybody in this industry has been cheated on," Rock continued in the special, filmed at the Hippodrome Theatre in Baltimore, Jada's hometown. "None of us have ever been interviewed by the person that cheated on us on television.... Why the f--- would you do that s---? She hurt him way more than he hurt me, okay?"

Still Together?
Rock and actress Lake Bell (in July 2022) began dating last summer. While she gave him a preshow shout-out on social media, Rock said he is "single" in the special.

According to an industry source, letting loose so publicly was cathartic for Rock, who also took aim at Meghan Markle and Michael Jackson, among others. "It has helped him on every level," the source says. "He gets it off his chest with an angry humor as he has done with other issues in his life. He said what he needed to say and doesn't give a s--- about the reaction."

And the responses have been divided. While some viewers commented on social media that they thought the comedian went too far, several of Rock's peers defended him. "This is his way of expressing [his feelings]," Saturday Night Live alum Leslie Jones wrote on Instagram in response to someone who commented, "you got to let stuff go."

No Holds Barred
Rock also joked about getting his daughter Lola (with Rock and her sister Zahra) kicked out of school after she was caught drinking, and Kris Jenner (bottom) and her daughters' taste in men.

So far the Smiths haven't publicly commented on Rock's act, but a source close to Jada, who is working on a book due out later this year, says she "has had no part in all of this other than being heckled. Chris seems obsessed with her, and that's been going on for almost 30 years." Her husband, who apologized to Rock in a statement the day after the Oscars, and again in a nearly six-minute-long video last July, "felt terrible for so long and tried unsuccessfully to make amends in the best way he could with Chris," says another Smith source. (Rock has yet to respond to Will's apology.) "Family is important to him, and he leaned on them. It all has helped him look inside and mature. He is better but still remorseful."

Inside the Vanderpump Rules Cheating Scandal

After nine years together Vanderpump Rules's Tom Sandoval and Ariana Madix split once Madix, 37, learned Sandoval, 39, has been having an affair with castmate Raquel Leviss, People has confirmed. The truth came out when Madix saw a sexy video from Leviss, 28, pop up on Sandoval's phone two days before the news went public on March 3. "This has been going on for upwards of six months—all the while, Tom was sleeping next to Ariana in bed," a source says. "She was completely blindsided." As fans and castmates stood by Madix, Sandoval apologized to his friends and colleagues on Instagram. But "a few of Sandoval's friends knew of the affair but never said anything," a production source claims. "This story coming out was only a matter of time." With a "#Scandoval" Instagram post, Bravo confirmed viewers will see the fallout in the show's current 10th season—as cameras have been rolling since it unfolded. —DANA ROSE FALCONE WITH REPORTING BY DAVE QUINN

Hoda Kotb Reveals Daughter's Health Scare

When Hoda Kotb returned to the Today show on March 6 for the first time in two weeks, she revealed that her absence was due to concerns over her 3-year-old daughter's health. "My youngest, Hope, was in the ICU for a few days and in the hospital for a little more than a week," Kotb, 58, told coanchor Savannah Guthrie. "I'm so grateful she's home."

Kotb's absence from the show (she had last appeared on Feb. 17) sparked concern among viewers, even before her colleagues announced on March 1 that she was away for "a family health matter." At press time the veteran journalist—who is also mom to daughter Haley, 6—had yet to share any specific details about why Hope was hospitalized. But upon her return she thanked friends and family for their support. "You know what I realized, too, Savannah? It's like, when your child is ill, the amount of gratitude you can have for people who helped you out," Kotb said. "So I'm grateful for the doctors at Weill Cornell, who were amazing, and the nurses. And I'm grateful for my family, and I'm grateful to friends like you who were there every single day."

Harry & Meghan Told to Vacate Their U.K. Home as Coronation Looms

Royal Residence Frogmore Cottage (below) was given to Harry and Meghan by Queen Elizabeth in 2018.

Sitting across from trauma therapist Dr. Gabor Maté on March 4 during a virtual event for his bestselling memoir Spare, Prince Harry talked about "feeling more and more distant" from his family in the U.K. That widening gulf was apparent days earlier when it was revealed that Harry, 38, and his wife, Meghan, Duchess of Sussex, 41, were being evicted from their Frogmore Cottage home in Windsor, England, by King Charles, 74. The couple's spokesperson confirmed that they were "requested to vacate their residence," while Charles's brother Prince Andrew, 63—disgraced because of his links to convicted sex offender Jeffrey Epstein—has reportedly been offered the five-bedroom residence. The palace has not commented on the decision, and a royal source says that discussions about the reshuffle are private family matters.

It hasn't been lost on observers that the news emerged after the publication of Harry's revealing memoir, which has intensified the rift between the Duke of Sussex and his family—though the couple knew about the move before the book came out, People understands. "Charles is now the guardian of the institution. The King just can't sit back," says royal historian Robert Lacey. "It shows Charles has a steel that his mother lacked. The Queen could never bring herself to confront Harry as an adult."

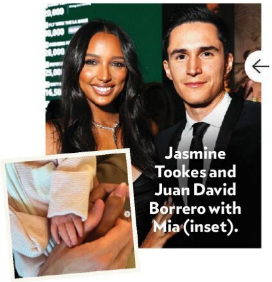

'CHARLES WANTS TO TIE UP LOOSE ENDS BEFORE HE IS CROWNED KING'

—ROYAL BIOGRAPHER INGRID SEWARD

Those close to Harry and Meghan say the decision is "unfortunate"—especially in terms of security, as Frogmore was a haven for the couple and their children Archie, 3, and Lilibet, 21 months, when they were in the U.K. But they are "matter-of-fact" about the eviction notice and aren't trying to overturn the decision, says a source, who adds that the Sussexes are happy to raise their family in Montecito, Calif. However, it remains to be seen whether the couple will receive a refund for part of the $2.9 million they spent on refurbishments and rental costs over several years, as the time on their lease has not yet expired.

There is also the issue of how the property shake-up will affect Charles's upcoming coronation on May 6. Harry and Meghan have received an invite to the ceremony, but their spokesperson says "an immediate decision" on whether they'll attend will "not be disclosed" at this time. —SIMON PERRY

Tom Sizemore Dies at 61

The Saving Private Ryan actor's life was marred by drugs and controversy

"I was a tough kid," Tom Sizemore said in 1995, in what would be one of many interviews trying to restart his career. "I don't punch people anymore." But Sizemore, best known as Sergeant Horvath in Saving Private Ryan (1998), would wrestle with his demons—and the law—for the rest of his life.

Three weeks after suffering a brain aneurysm, he died on March 10 in L.A. at age 61. Dana Delaney, who worked with him on China Beach in 1989, remembered him as "full of dreams." At his peak, the Detroit native earned $4 million a film, bringing a striking grittiness to True Romance (1993), Heat (1995) and Private Ryan, a high point he compared to being "invited behind the curtain of Oz."

His fall was precipitous. Convicted of domestic abuse of girlfriend Heidi Fleiss in 2003, he was arrested on similar charges two other times. He spent several stretches in jail and struggled publicly with addiction. Watching himself on Celeb Rehab in 2010, he said: "I thought, 'The guy sitting there looks like the saddest guy that ever lived.'" Sizemore is survived by twin sons Jayden and Jagger, 17, with ex-girlfriend Janelle McIntire. —TOM GLIATTO

"[Her] lifelong advocacy for the rights and dignity of people with disabilities made the world a better place for everyone," wrote Hillary Clinton on Twitter. ● Saxophonist and composer Wayne Shorter, who is widely credited with shaping modern jazz music, died in a hospital in L.A. on March 2. Alex Murdaugh Found Guilty of Murder

The disgraced lawyer was sentenced to life in prison in the shooting deaths of his wife, Maggie, and son Paul

'YOU CONTINUED TO LIE AND LIE. WITHIN YOUR OWN SOUL, YOU'LL HAVE TO DEAL WITH THAT'
—JUDGE CLIFTON NEWMAN

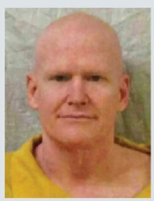

During the six-week double-murder trial of Alex Murdaugh, prosecutors and defense lawyers called more than 75 witnesses to the stand and presented some 800 pieces of evidence to support or deny the disbarred attorney's alleged connection to the June 7, 2021, fatal shootings of his wife, Maggie, 52, and son Paul, 22. But it took jurors less than three hours to render their verdicts on March 2: Murdaugh was found guilty of two counts of first-degree murder and of two related firearms offenses. The defendant, 54, sat emotionless as the decision was read, then turned to his surviving son Buster, 26, who was seated in the courtroom, and mouthed the words "It's okay."

On the following day Judge Clifton Newman criticized Murdaugh's "duplicitous conduct" and sentenced him to two life terms in prison. "The question is when will [your lies] end?" he asked. "[The jury has] concluded that you continued to lie and lie throughout your testimony."

The case began in 2021, when Murdaugh called 911 and reported he had returned from a brief visit with his ailing mother to find his wife and son shot to death on the family's 1,770-acre hunting estate in Islandton, S.C. As authorities began to investigate, they found inconsistencies in Murdaugh's alibi and later charged him with their murders. Although he told detectives he was nowhere near Maggie and Paul on the night they were killed at the dog kennels on their hunting estate, on the first day of the trial prosecutors presented as evidence a Snapchat video taken by Paul at 8:44 p.m.—just minutes before the murders—in which Murdaugh can be heard speaking to his wife and son. Then, in a surprise move, Murdaugh took the stand in his own defense and seemed to choke back tears as he explained he had lied to authorities because of "paranoid" thinking resulting from his drug addiction. "I lied about being there," he said, "and I'm so sorry that I did."

Murdaugh's trial was perhaps the highest-profile case in the history of South Carolina's Low Country, where his family has been well-known for their political and legal influence for generations. "Their power was impenetrable," says one of Alex's former law partners. But the dynasty has now fallen: Murdaugh still faces nearly 100 counts of embezzlement and fraud and has admitted to stealing more than $8 million from clients and his law firm. Before he was taken away to prison on March 3, Judge Newman said Murdaugh will forever be haunted by his crimes. "I know you have to see Paul and Maggie . . . when you're attempting to go to sleep," he said. "I'm sure they come and visit you." —STEVE HELLING

WEEKEND movie!

MOVIE | Scream VI

Watch out! The slasher series comes to the Big Apple

HORROR The Scream movies take twisted pleasure in keeping audiences on edge as one character after another is gruesomely murdered, but amid the bloodshed—and this latest installment is the goriest yet—there's a welcome, almost reassuring familiarity to the franchise's signposts, established in the iconic 1996 debut. There's that initial phone ring, so loud as to jolt you from your seat; a first killing that always packs a surprise; the rules of the game, spelled out in a wryly written scene; lots of running; and finally a big Agatha Christie-like reveal where the killer Ghostface is unmasked.

'This latest installment is the goriest yet'

Scream VI wisely doesn't reinvent this wheel. We get the return of the previous film's fresh, young cast (including Melissa Barrera and Jenna Ortega, who develop their bond as formerly estranged sisters) and franchise stalwart Courteney Cox. But with New York City as an expansive new setting, returning directors Tyler Gillett and Matt Bettinelli-Olpin up the scare factor. A crowded subway packed with Halloween revelers (guess which costume is the most popular?) proves to be the menacing setup for a major showdown, while one brutal sequence set in a bodega feels terrifyingly real. (Rated R, in theaters March 10)

HULU | UnPrisoned

COMEDY Kerry Washington (Scandal) shows a lighter, playful side as Paige, a therapist and single mom gamely trying to fit her just-out-of-prison dad (Delroy Lindo) back into her life. HBO | Perry Mason

DRAMA Matthew Rhys, who can currently be seen falling to his death from a plane at the start of Cocaine Bear, returns in excellent, bleary form as detective-turned-attorney Mason, who keeps falling into legal and moral quagmires in 1930s L.A. He's that rare thing: a cynic who cares too much. In season 2 the murder of a shady fellow with deep, impressive connections leads Mason into a dense case peopled with sleazoids worthy of Babylon. Luckily here there are no distressed elephants with potty issues. (Mondays, 9 p.m.)

THRILLER Elba stars in a stand-alone movie based on the Luther crime series that rocketed him to international fame in 2010. This time around Det. Robey leads Luther on a not-so-merry chase that pauses from time to time for displays of the killer's baroque sense of cruelty—corpses arranged as a chandelier, that sort of thing. Elba retains his bruising yet somehow amusing presence throughout this breathless malarkey. (Launches March 10)

A Dynasty Divided
Priscilla and Riley (with Lisa Marie in 2015) have been tangling over Elvis's beloved Graceland estate. "It's a sad situation," says a family source.

THE FIGHT to CONTROL GRACELAND

SINCE LISA MARIE PRESLEY'S DEATH, HER MOTHER, PRISCILLA, AND DAUGHTER RILEY HAVE BEEN AT ODDS OVER HOW TO CARRY ON HER—AND ELVIS'S—LEGACY

By BRIANNE TRACY

Moments before Lisa Marie Presley's public memorial began on Jan. 22 in Memphis, her family—mom Priscilla, half brother Navarone Garibaldi Garcia, daughters Riley Keough and twins Finley and Harper Lockwood, along with the twins' dad, Michael Lockwood—appeared united as they exited Graceland and took their seats on the front lawn. As thousands of fans looked on, Lisa Marie's loved ones delivered moving tributes. But behind the scenes, drama was brewing. "Michael was not invited," a close friend of Lisa Marie's maintains. "He came to Memphis under the pretense that he had to chaperone the twins—and he forced his way in with Priscilla's help. The last thing Lisa Marie would have wanted was for Michael to be there."

In the weeks leading up to her death on Jan. 12 at age 54, Lisa Marie and Priscilla, 77, had seemed close at various events while celebrating Baz Luhrmann's Oscar-nominated Elvis biopic. But multiple sources say the two were barely speaking, and their relationship had been fractured since Lisa Marie's split from Michael, 61, in 2016. After the breakup the exes were embroiled in a nasty custody battle over the twins that lasted until October of last year. Friends say Lisa Marie resented that Priscilla sided with Michael, and the tension trickled down to Riley, 33. (Her dad is Lisa Marie's first husband, singer Danny Keough, 58.) "Riley was always on her mom's side when it came to Michael," says a Riley source. "It bothered her that her grandmother and Michael flew to the funeral together."

> ## 'Lisa loved Graceland. She always considered it home'
> —ELVIS'S FRIEND JERRY SCHILLING

The simmering tension exploded four days after the memorial when lawyers for Priscilla filed a petition in Los Angeles questioning the "authenticity and validity" of a 2016 amendment to Lisa Marie's living trust. The change had removed Priscilla and Lisa Marie's former business manager Barry Siegel as cotrustees and given control of the trust—the Graceland mansion and a 15 percent stake in Elvis Presley Enterprises (EPE), which together brought in a reported $110 million in 2022—to Riley and Lisa Marie's son Benjamin Keough, who died by suicide at age 27 in 2020. 5. Petitioner believes that the 2010 restated trust (hereinafter, the "Trust") under which Petitioner has been acting as Trustee is a valid trust.

7. After Lisa Marie Presley's death, Petitioner discovered that a document existed pertaining to be an amendment to the Trust dated March 11, 2016 (the "Purported 2016 Amendment"). The Purported 2016 Amendment removed and replaced Petitioner and Barry as both current and successor Trustees of the Trust with Lisa Marie Presley as the current Trustee and naming Lisa Marie Presley's daughter, Riley Keough ("Riley"), and son, Benjamin Keough ("Benjamin"), as successor co-Trustees of the Trust upon Lisa Marie Presley's incapacity and/or death.

8. There are many issues surrounding the authenticity and validity of the Purported 2016 Amendment, including, but not limited to: (1) the Purported 2016 Amendment was never delivered to Petitioner during Lisa Marie Presley's lifetime as required by the express terms of the

THE COURT BATTLE

Probate lawyer David Esquibias breaks down the case

What will likely happen at the April 13 hearing?
If they haven't reached a resolution by then, the judge may order them to private mediation. They can be as creative as they want. For example: Priscilla withdraws her petition, a third party becomes trustee, or they dissolve the trust entirely.

What power do trustees hold?
A trustee typically has exclusive control over trust property: buying, selling, investing. Their duty is to protect the trust and make its property productive. They usually provide an accounting once a year to beneficiaries.

Do trustees get paid?
Usually trustees are compensated 1 percent per year of the net value of the estate. In a large estate that's a lot of money.

How are Lisa Marie's children affected by the legal outcome?
Lisa Marie's Promenade Trust states her kids receive one-third of the trust at age 25, half of the remaining at 30 and the entire balance at 35. Before age 25, they have the right to withdraw funds for specific reasons, but only at the trustees' discretion.

amendment until after Lisa Marie's death, argued it should be voided because of several factors, including that Lisa Marie had not informed her of the changes as required by the terms of the trust. But Lisa Marie's friend claims "there's zero question" what her wishes were: "Lisa wanted Riley and Ben to be the trustees"—and for all her children to be the beneficiaries. Now, as they mourn, Riley and Priscilla are barely speaking, according to multiple sources. Says a Presley family insider: "They do not see eye to eye." (Reps for Priscilla, Riley, Lockwood and Siegel did not comment for this story.)

They're clashing over a fortune that has seen extreme ups and down over the years. The roots of the dynasty were planted in 1959 when Elvis—already a rock and roll superstar—first met 14-year-old Army brat Priscilla while he was stationed with the U.S. Army in Germany. In 1963, 17-year-old Priscilla moved to Memphis; she married Elvis in 1967 and gave birth to Lisa Marie exactly nine months later. After her parents' divorce in 1973, Lisa Marie moved with her mom to L.A. but regularly visited her dad. "She ruled Graceland at 6, 7 years old," remembers talent manager Jerry Schilling, a member of Elvis's "Memphis Mafia." "Elvis spoiled her. He used to say, 'Look, I don't want to hoard up this money.' He was known to give a lot of gifts, and he didn't think about longevity or old age."

When Elvis died from cardiac arrest in 1977 at age 42, he left behind an estate worth about $5 million. His will named his father, Vernon, executor and Lisa Marie, then 9 years old, his heir. Vernon died in 1979, and his will named Priscilla, his and Elvis's longtime accountant and the National Bank of Commerce in Memphis as coexecutors of Elvis's estate until Lisa Marie turned 25. With mounting bills (Graceland cost $480,000 a year to maintain) and no incoming royalties (Elvis and his manager, Colonel Tom Parker, had sold the rights to most of his early hits to RCA Records), Graceland faced an uncertain financial future. "The question I kept asking myself over and over was, 'What are we ever going to do?'" Priscilla recalled to the Los Angeles Times in 1989.

When the IRS imposed a $10 million inheritance tax on the estate in 1981 after reappraising it at $22.5 million, Priscilla used the last $500,000 of the estate's liquid assets to turn Graceland into a tourist attraction in 1982. "The word on the street in Memphis was, 'This won't last for six months,'" Schilling says. But Graceland recouped the investment in 38 days and now draws more than 500,000 visitors a year. "It's the epitome of Elvis and the American dream," says author Martin Torgoff, an Elvis expert.

By the time Lisa Marie turned 25 in 1993, the estate's value topped $100 million. (Beginning in 1983, EPE was able to make additional income from memorabilia and licensing fees; EPE also signed a deal with RCA in the '90s entitling the estate to royalties from packaged anthologies of Elvis's music.) She formed the Promenade Trust to manage the estate, with Priscilla and the National Bank of Commerce as cotrustees. "Everything remains the same, except I'm on the management team now," Lisa Marie told People in 1993, noting that Priscilla had done "an astounding job" of managing her finances.

While the rift between mother and daughter was deep before Lisa Marie's death, they had overcome difficult periods before. In 1993 Lisa Marie explained how they fought during her teen years: "I was just in that rebellious stage." Tony Ortega, a journalist who has investigated Scientology, says Lisa Marie "resented" Priscilla's regularly dropping her off at Scientology facilities as a child: "She felt like she had to fend for herself." At the time of her death, Lisa Marie had long since left the church, and Priscilla and the rest of the family have not spoken about whether they are currently members.

When Lisa Marie launched her music career in 2003, she appointed her business manager Barry Siegel as a cotrustee with Priscilla. Less than two years into his role, Siegel sold 85 percent of the trust's interests in EPE, which was still worth around $100 million. By 2015 the trust was left with only $14,000 in cash and mountains of debt, leading to Lisa Marie's lawsuit against Siegel in 2018 for mismanagement of her trust. She alleged that Siegel had given Priscilla an annual salary of $900,000, though she had no ownership or official position in EPE. (She and Siegel settled for an undisclosed amount out of court.)

As Lisa Marie's finances and her marriage to Lockwood crumbled (she had previously been married to Keough, Michael Jackson and Nicolas Cage), so did her relationship with Priscilla. "I can assure you, in the last seven years of Lisa's life, she never discussed with Priscilla any business," her friend maintains, adding that before Benjamin's death, Lisa Marie had "inquired on multiple occasions what it would take" to buy back more of a stake in EPE. "She wanted each of her four children to have 5 percent of the estate," says the friend.

If the 2016 amendment is voided in court, Priscilla and Riley would be cotrustees. "Priscilla doesn't want Riley solely in charge, because then she has no say," says the family insider. "Meanwhile, Riley doesn't want Priscilla to butt in." Adds the Riley source: "It's a very sad situation. Riley is shocked Priscilla is contesting the amendment." In a Feb. 3 statement, Priscilla maintained she is acting with "integrity and love," and a Lockwood source says the matriarch remains close to Michael to "be a part of her grandchildren's lives."

> —A SOURCE

With a court hearing scheduled for April 13, sources say Riley is focused on her acting career—she stars in Amazon Prime Video's new limited series Daisy Jones & the Six—and Elvis's first great-grandchild. At her mother's memorial, Riley's stuntman husband, Ben Smith-Petersen, revealed that they had had their first child in 2022. "Lisa Marie's death has been very painful for Riley, but welcoming her baby girl has been blissful," says the Riley source. "She loves being a mom." Meanwhile, Priscilla has co-created Netflix's Agent Elvis, an animated series that debuts March 17, and she's the subject of an upcoming biopic directed by Sofia Coppola.

As Priscilla and Riley vie for control of Elvis's financial legacy, his old friend Jerry Schilling hopes to see one part of the mythology remain intact. "I would like for Graceland itself to stay as it has for the last 45 years, as a piece of history captured in time," he says. "I'd like to see it as Elvis left it, as he decorated it, for the generations of Presley children. It's the White House of rock and roll."

MICHAEL B. JORDAN

Living His Dream

THE ACTOR TAKES ON HIS BIGGEST CHALLENGE YET AS A DIRECTOR—AND PROVES HAPPINESS IS WORTH THE FIGHT

By JULIE JORDAN

Back in 2013, Michael B. Jordan, then 26, was all smiles on a studio backlot in L.A. as he was being interviewed for People's first annual Ones to Watch portfolio profiling up-and-coming talent. The New Jersey-raised actor had just starred in the acclaimed movie Fruitvale Station. He wasn't yet aware of how meteoric his rise in Hollywood would become, with heralded performances in Black Panther and the Creed films along with a Sexiest Man Alive crown in 2020. But he had an idea of what he wanted his future to look like. "In 10 years, hopefully my career has continued to be successful.... All the clichés, happy, healthy," he said. "I'll be curious to see what kind of man I'll be."

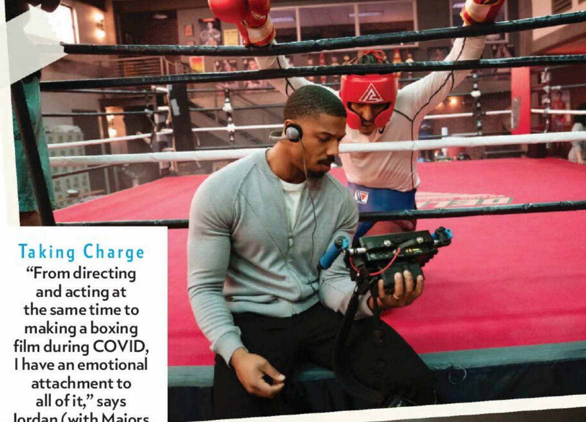

A decade later, with the world premiere of Creed III on his 36th birthday, Jordan officially added director to his long list of accomplishments. The film earned $58.6 million at the U.S. box office on its opening weekend, the highest debut ever for a sports movie. Jordan was proud to share his own take on the Rocky franchise, in which he returns as Adonis, the son of Apollo Creed, Rocky Balboa's renowned opponent. "Every day it was a fight to make this movie, and you don't do it alone," Jordan says. "For the crew and cast to give me their all and trust me, when I don't have a track record, it means a lot and I took that seriously."

The actor caught the directing bug as he wrapped the second film in the series. "I was daydreaming about where I wanted it to go," he adds. "I talked to some of the collaborators and producers, and everybody was like, 'Look, Mike, you're probably the best person to tell the story.' " Starring alongside Jonathan Majors, who plays Adonis's childhood friend turned rival, Jordan once again got in chiseled shape for the role. Before production started, he worked out six days a week for four months, boxing and lifting weights. Once filming began, "the toughest part [of working out] was because I didn't have as much time to focus on it," he says. "But having someone like Jonathan, who worked equally as hard as I did, we really became teammates and like a real brotherhood. We pushed each other."

Taking Charge
"From directing and acting at the same time to making a boxing film during COVID, I have an emotional attachment to all of it," says Jordan (with Majors, below) of filming Creed III.

It's safe to say the younger Jordan would be quite impressed by his career today. After getting his start as a teen on the HBO series The Wire, the actor went on to star on NBC's Friday Night Lights and Parenthood before Fruitvale put him on the path to superstar roles. Now he produces many of his own projects through his Outlier Society Productions, and he was the first actor-producer to adopt an inclusion rider mandating that filmmakers enlist a diverse cast and crew. "Being able to do for others and give them the opportunity to win makes me happy," he says.

Next up for the actor, who is single after his split with model Lori Harvey last year, is a well-deserved vacation. "Just going somewhere without a phone and be able to sit in my own thoughts is what I'm looking forward to the most," he says. Jordan deems 2023 his "enjoy-it year. Every day is like a dream, so right now I'm enjoying it."

And where does he see himself in another decade? "Ooh, owner of a couple of sports teams. Maybe businesses throughout different countries. A family. Maybe a trip to space? Who knows? And hopefully directing and making more movies," he says. Happiness, he insists, "is a fleeting feeling. But I think just being able to accomplish something that I didn't think was possible, that I didn't know I could do, is what makes me happy. And I'm just trying to hold on to those feelings as long as I can." ●

A Mother's Joy
Jordan's mom, Donna, watched him get his star on the Hollywood Walk of Fame on March 1. "My queen. I love to see my mom's smile," he says.

SHE SANG THE SMASH THAT INSPIRED COUNTLESS COMEBACKS. AS HER ENDURING HIT 'I WILL SURVIVE' TURNS 45, THE DISCO LEGEND, 79, CELEBRATES HER TRIUMPHS WHILE LOOKING FORWARD TO THE FUTURE

By RACHEL DeSANTIS

There are come-to-Jesus moments—and then there are, well, moments when Jesus comes to you. Disco queen Gloria Gaynor says divine intervention saved her at a party she attended in the early '80s with her then husband in a Los Angeles hotel suite. Worried he might cheat on her if she went to bed, she was tempted to get an energy boost from cocaine. "I was going to try it," Gaynor recalls, "and the Holy Spirit literally grabbed me by my collar and lifted my chin and said, 'That's enough. You don't need to do this.'"

That moment set her on a path toward healing, much as her enduring life-after-love disco anthem "I Will Survive" has done for the millions it has touched in the 45 years since it became a classic. "I have not only survived, I have thrived," says Gaynor, 79, who found renewed confidence and success following her 2005 divorce from former manager Linwood Simon after 26 years of marriage. "I really think a lot of it has to do with the fact that whenever I'm going through something, I have used that song."

Both survival and joy have been cornerstones of Gaynor's career. From her glittering 1974 take on the Jackson Five's "Never Can Say Goodbye" to the empowering "I Will Survive," her disco hits have been encouraging shy wallflowers to cut loose on the dance floor for decades. "I Will Survive," in particular, continues to inspire new generations of superstars: Harry Styles brought Lizzo onstage to sing it during his headlining Coachella set last April, and Miley Cyrus interpolated it into "Flowers," her current chart-topper. "People still are being hurt; people still are needing to be uplifted and encouraged and supported, and I love that," says Gaynor.

When "I Will Survive" was released in 1978 as the B side to the single "Substitute," Gaynor had already faced a series of life-changing setbacks. Though she had a happy, music-filled childhood in Newark with her "wise and wonderful" mother, Queenie, and six siblings, she was deeply affected by three instances of sexual abuse that began at age 5. That, along with her father's absence, weighed on her as she got older and started dating. "I wasn't as confident as I could have and should have been with boyfriends," she says. "When you're sexually abused like that, you have very, very low self-esteem."

When Gaynor wed Simon in 1979, she wanted to prove to her mother—and to herself—that she had finally found security. "I had a terrible fear of being left alone," she says. But their happiness was short-lived. While her marriage to Simon had "wonderful moments," Gaynor says the union never felt like an equal partnership. She wanted children while Simon did not, and, she says, "I just swallowed whatever he said and did whatever he said and just let him have his way."

Following her religious awakening in the '80s, Gaynor—who faced further heartbreak when her sister Irma Proctor died in 1995 after being attacked while attempting to intervene in a street

Growing Up
"Kids don't know they're poor as long as they're loved," Gaynor (in 1961) says of her upbringing.

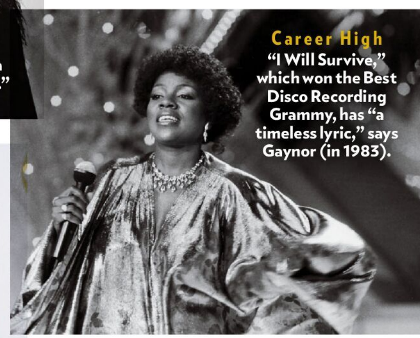

Losing a Sister
Irma (with Gaynor in 1975) was comatose before she died in 1995. "I was very hurt," says Gaynor, who played music by her bedside.

'70s Royalty
Gaynor (ca. 1975) was elected Queen of Disco in 1975 and celebrated with a New York City "coronation."

Married Life
Gaynor says she spent her marriage to Simon (in 1984) "afraid he would leave me" but ultimately feels their split "worked out great."

Career High
"I Will Survive," which won the Best Disco Recording Grammy, has "a timeless lyric," says Gaynor (in 1983).

Dream Project
Gaynor won Best Roots Gospel Album at the 2020 Grammys for Testimony, an album she'd "always wanted" to make.

Getting Into Character
Gaynor competed as the Mermaid in season 8 of Fox's The Masked Singer last fall.

fight—found strength in her faith. In 2004 she finally filed for divorce after a particularly telling incident in which she says Simon refused to take her to the hospital while she was suffering from an excruciating migraine. "I said, 'Okay, I'm done. You really, truly don't care about me, and I'm done.' I'd have to be freakin' comatose not to get that," Gaynor remembers. "My friend nailed it when she said it was disregard. You don't know how painful that can be until you experience it. [Leaving him] was extremely liberating."

Freed from Simon's grip, Gaynor—who underwent high-risk surgeries in 2018 to ease chronic back pain stemming from a 1978 onstage fall—fulfilled a lifelong goal of recording a gospel album in 2019, and the self-funded Testimony earned the star her second Grammy in 2020. "What made it so sweet was that I had been wanting to do this for many, many years, but my ex kept putting it off," she says. "He didn't see any financial benefit in that."

Though she never had another hit as big as "I Will Survive," Gaynor has kept busy in the decades since. She's released more than 20 albums, and she made her latest acting appearance last fall in the movie The Thursday Night Club. There's also an upcoming album, which she's writing and recording in Nashville with collaborators who have worked with Taylor Swift, Justin Bieber and Maroon 5, and she'll release a new fragrance and her documentary Gloria Gaynor: I Will Survive later this year. Meanwhile, she hopes to put to use the bachelor's degree in psychology she earned at age 68—a "difficult but fun" achievement, she says—by counseling young fathers. "Because I grew up without a father, I want to open a place to help them understand how important they are to their children," she explains.

As she approaches her 80th birthday in September, Gaynor's plate is full and her life is sweet. "I'm very happy," she says. "I'm very content where I am. If God called me right now, I'd say, 'Okay, here I come.' But if he's got more for me to do here, I'm willing to stay here and do it. I just want to live until I die." ●

From B Side to Disco Classic

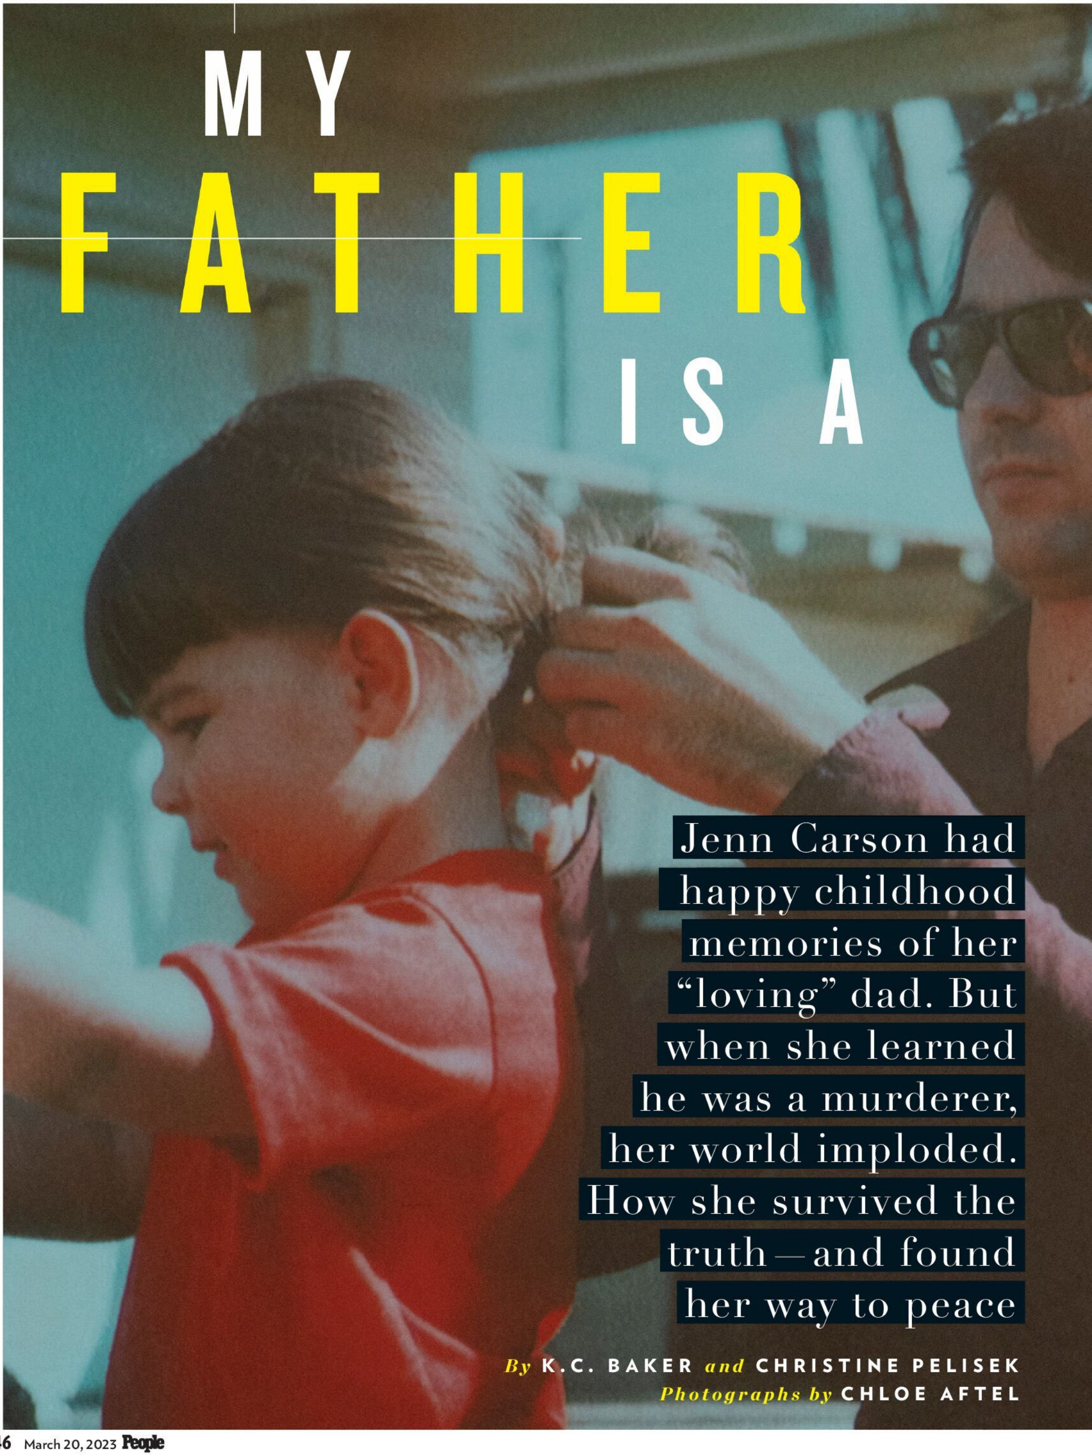

Gaynor was in a back brace after an onstage fall and reeling from her mother's death when she first heard "I Will Survive." She knew it should be more than a B side and recalls telling producers: "What are you, nuts? You're going to put this on the B side? Everybody's going to be able to relate whatever they're going through [to this song]." When DJs started flipping the single, it became a defining disco-era smash.

MY FATHER IS A

Jenn Carson had happy childhood memories of her "loving" dad. But when she learned he was a murderer, her world imploded. How she survived the truth—and found her way to peace

SERIAL KILLER

HIDDEN EVIL
Jenn Carson (on Dec. 11, 2022, in front of a snapshot of her with her father, ca. 1978) was 9 years old when her dad was arrested and charged with multiple murders. It has haunted her ever since.

From the very moment Jenn Carson was born, her father, James, was seemingly devoted to her. At just 23, the young dad would "hold me, feed me, dress me," says Jenn, while her mom, Lynne, 25, went to work as a teacher. Jenn's earliest memories include her dad taking her to the petting zoo, playing with her in the park, reading to her at bedtime and gently brushing and braiding her hair in the backyard of their Phoenix home. "He was loving, he was fun," Jenn says. "I remember him being very attentive."

Though her parents divorced in the late 1970s when Jenn was in preschool—and she and her mom moved to Southern California—Jenn still cherished memories of her dad. But one day in 1982 a fateful knock on her door changed everything. "It was the Secret Service—literally men in black," recalls Jenn, who was 7 years old at the time. The men had questions for Lynne: "They asked her, 'Have you been in contact with your ex-husband?' 'What are his political beliefs?' 'Has he ever threatened to kill a president?'" says Jenn.

It turns out that Jenn's father—who changed his name to Michael Bear Carson—and his new wife, Suzan, were being investigated by authorities for murder and for planning to assassinate then President Ronald Reagan. They were dubbed the "San Francisco Witch Killers" because they claimed they murdered their victims for being "demons" and "witches."

Though Lynne tried to protect her daughter from the gruesome details of the killings, when Michael and Suzan were arrested in 1983, Lynne sat down with a then-9-year-old Jenn. "She said, 'Your daddy's really sick,'" Jenn recalls. "'He hurt people and he's going to jail.' The first thing I asked was, 'Are the hurt people dead?' She said, 'Yes.' I asked, 'Did the dead people have mommies?' She said, 'Yes.' For a long time we sat there, and she was hugging me while I cried."

FRACTURED FAMILY
1. Jenn (right, in 2022) has kept mementos of her life, from her happy childhood to traumatic discoveries, including family photos, newspaper clippings and a postcard from her father. 2. "He used to be fun," she says about her dad (with Jenn in the family's yard in Phoenix). 3. Lynne and James (holding Jenn) divorced before James's killing spree began, with his new wife an accomplice in the killings.

It was just the beginning of years of anguished tears Jenn would shed over her dad. In 1984 Michael and Suzan Carson were convicted of the murder of Keryn Barnes, 23, and were later convicted of murdering two others—Clark Stephens, 26, and Jon Hellyar, 30. The pair were also suspects in 12 other unsolved murder cases in the U.S. and Europe. (Jenn's father, 72, and Suzan, 81, are serving 75-year-to-life sentences in separate California prisons.) While Jenn has no contact with her dad and has opposed his parole, the deep shame she felt in the aftermath of his crime spree—and her sense of guilt that she was somehow associated with it—led to a lifetime of debilitating depression, PTSD and even thoughts of suicide.

Finally, after years of therapy and coursework, Dr. Jenn Carson, as she is known pro-

James and Lynne Carson were both college students in Iowa when they got married in 1970. When Jenn was born in 1974, her dad—known to his professors for being "intellectually gifted, very high-achieving," says Jenn—insisted on dropping out to be a stay-at-home dad. Lynne graduated and got work teaching, expecting her husband to also get a job. But James, whose marijuana smoking was then a daily habit, refused.

The Carsons divorced in 1978, and James married Suzan, a divorced mother of two who claimed to be a mystic with psychic powers. When Jenn visited her dad on weekends—James had joint custody—both James and Suzan frequently took LSD, and Suzan was frightening and physically abusive, Jenn says. "In my mind she was the wicked witch," she says. When Jenn came home from a weekend visit with bloody, open scratch marks on her back, given to her by Suzan during a "back rub," Lynne soon moved out of town without telling James, terrified for her child's safety.

'I WAS A SUICIDAL CHILD OF A HOMICIDAL FATHER'

DEADLY DYNAMICS
Convicted murderers Suzan and Michael Bear Carson (seen here talking to reporters at the Sonoma County jail in 1983) confessed to the killings and said they were acting on directions from a "supernatural voice" heard by Suzan.

And when the Secret Service arrived, "she told them, 'He's dangerous, and Suzan's even more dangerous,' " says Jenn.

When Jenn learned the truth about her father, she wanted to know more, reading newspaper clippings she found in the sock drawer of her mom's dresser. She began to worry that she had inherited "monster genes" and started having vivid nightmares about her father's victims that would continue for years. "I started sleeping with knives and scissors because the world had become a frightening place," she says.

She credits her mother, with whom she remains close, and her stepfather, Mike Gonzalez, who met Lynne in 1984, with helping her to heal. Gonzalez sought counseling for Jenn, signed her up for Girl Scouts and the choir at their church and put her on a regular schedule. "He invested in me," says Jenn. "And that's why I'm okay today."

Still, suicidal thoughts and extreme depression remained "a struggle," she says, and she is still in therapy. But a few years ago Jenn made a vow: "When I was young it was always 'Poor Jenny this,' 'Poor Jenny that.' Even my family didn't see any chance for me," she says. "But I dug in. I said to myself, 'Let's not just survive. Let's thrive.' "

Now a mental health advocate with a doctorate in social work, Jenn says she is proud to help others: "I would like to continue to grow in this work.… I'm 48 and I'm just getting started." ●

"It was just the right chemistry," says Liu of joining Shazam! Fury of the Gods costars Helen Mirren and Rachel Zegler.

LUCY LIU

'Nothing Was Going to Stop Me'

THE ACTRESS TALKS ABOUT FINDING SUCCESS AGAINST THE ODDS, INSPIRING A NEW GENERATION AND WHAT'S NEXT

By SCOTT HUVER

Photographs by ERIC CHARBONNEAU

She's been working in Hollywood for more than 25 years—so it may seem like Lucy Liu's place in the public eye was always assured. But the actress, now starring as the villainous deity Kalypso in Shazam! Fury of the Gods, says it hasn't always been easy. "I've had to fight for roles," says Liu, 54. "I've always had to go in against all odds."

Raised in Queens by Chinese immigrant parents, Liu was determined at an early age to become an actress. "To me, the world was always open, and I never saw a ceiling, just bumps in the road. Nothing was going to stop me," she says. Through her determination and talent, she built an impressive career with roles on TV shows like Ally McBeal and Elementary and in films such as Charlie's Angels, Kill Bill Vol. 1 and the Kung Fu Panda franchise. She was also the first Asian woman to host Saturday Night Live (in 2000) and in 2019 became only the second Asian American woman to get a star on the Hollywood Walk of Fame (after Anna May Wong).

A new generation of stars has cited her as an inspiration, including Gemma Chan, Kelly Marie Tran and Awkwafina, who has said watching Liu in Charlie's Angels "changed my life. I'd never seen an Asian American actress kick ass onscreen before. It was a big deal to me."

Liu, a single mom to son Rockwell, 7, says that while she never set out to be a role model, she's happy to have been able to help others. "I feel a great sense of pride that something that I loved doing has helped them realize that it's possible for them," she says. "I never in my wildest dreams would've thought that, but I'm glad that I have had some impact in a positive way." Here the actress talks about fame, her new film and finding her voice.

You read the Shazam! comic books as a kid. What's it like to now star in a movie version?
I was about 6 when I discovered Shazam! in comic book form. For me, it just seemed part of Americana, kind of like Bazooka gum. My parents were from China, and they both immigrated to New York separately and met there. It just didn't seem like there was ever going to be a connection with me and what was in the [Shazam!] world. And so now that I get to be a part of that, it's very exciting because there's something very nostalgic about it.

What was the best part about working with Helen Mirren in this film?
Helen's got this incredible résumé. The plethora of roles that she's played, the places she's been and her generosity really helped ground both Rachel [Zegler] and me, and it made it really fun. This

CAREER-DEFINING MOMENTS

Ally McBeal
Liu (with Portia de Rossi and Calista Flockhart) got her breakout role as a ferocious lawyer on the 1997-2002 TV series.

Kill Bill: Volume 1
She learned to wield a samurai sword for Quentin Tarantino's 2003 martial arts epic: "Whatever they toss at me, I can do it."

is sort of a lifelong friendship that I think we've developed, and it's something that I cherish.

Does being in a superhero movie up your cool cred at home with your son?

My son doesn't really know that much about superhero movies yet. He's 7, and he's very aware of things like Harry Potter—things that have magic in them—but we haven't really gotten into that whole Superman, Spider-Man thing. I think this will be something he'll discover when he's a little bit older. So ask me in a few years!

How do you think Asian representation in Hollywood has evolved since the beginning of your career?

We have a long way to go, but it's about creating a space and hopefully some sense of normalcy. It's exciting to see Everything Everywhere All at Once [the Oscar-nominated film with a predominantly Asian cast] have success. I love that it was done as an independent film, because those are the ones that you root for, the underdog. They were doing something out of love and passion.

Your friendship with your Charlie's Angels costars Drew Barrymore and Cameron Diaz has lasted all these years. What's the best part about your bond?

What I love about that relationship is that so many people denied it and created these rumors that we were fighting and that we didn't get along. But ultimately what I think people miss is that women can get along. We don't have to continue the idea that women are catfighting. And now we see with the #MeToo movement all of these things happening, and it sort of breaks and shatters those old prejudices.

You've spoken out about your on-set difficulties with Charlie's Angels costar Bill Murray. (In 2021 Liu said the actor hurled "inexcusable" insults toward her while making the film in 2000.) How do you feel now that several other people have come forward about negative experiences with him?

I felt sad that it happened to other people. It doesn't make me feel validated to hear other people having bad experiences. I don't think it's a great feeling to have to live with that and to feel that you're punishing yourself for something that you had no control over. I feel very grateful that people are able to speak their minds and release that because I don't think it's a positive energy to hold within yourself. It's valuable to be able to connect to other people and feel like you're not the only one.

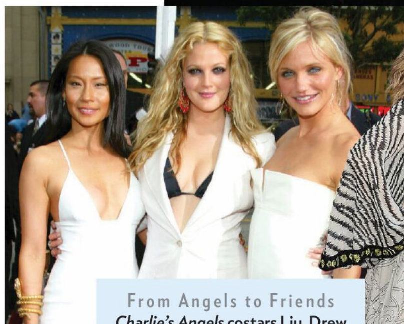

When you look back at your career, what are you the most proud of?

I always find it amazing that I got this far. One minute I was selling T-shirts in SoHo on the street, and then here I am now. It's hard to track the journey. It's like I was teleported into another world. Having a star on the Walk of Fame was something that I really never dreamed could happen. I couldn't be more thrilled to be among that group. It's history-making. I was living under the Hollywood sign when I first started out, and going from there to that moment was really spectacular.

What would you love to tackle next?

There's so much to attack! There's so much. The target is just getting bigger and bigger. There's so many things to do, I don't feel like I've even started. This is really just the beginning. ●

Lying on a Ukrainian roadside after a succession of Russian missiles struck him and two other members of his Fox News crew last March, veteran war correspondent Benjamin Hall woke up on fire and looked up at the sky, unsure of what to do. "I had my body armor over my jacket, and it was all shredded except for the little part underneath," he recalls. "And amazingly, in there were my phones, my passport and little Yellow Jumpsuit"—the prized stuffed hedgehog belonging to his daughters that he always kept close on far-flung reporting trips. Looking back on that dazed and desperate moment, he says, "you realize just how important those little links are to your family and to your children."

One year after the attack that forever changed his life, Hall, 40, is sharing his story for the first time in a powerful new memoir, Saved. The father of three daughters—Honor, 7, Iris, 5, and Hero, 3—is adjusting to life with prosthetics after spending months in a U.S. hospital thousands of miles from his London home, where he was confronted with the brutal reality of losing his right leg, large portions of his left foot and function in his left eye and left hand. He credits his faith—and an eagerness to reunite with his daughters and wife Alicia, 38—with propelling him forward in the darkest times. "I feel in some ways exactly the same person," he says. "And I feel in other ways a totally new person."

A dual citizen of the U.S. and the U.K. who was raised in London by a businessman father and a mother who filled his childhood with "wonder,"

HIS JOURNEY BACK

Before the Bombing
Hall reports from the decimated town of Horenka, Ukraine, on March 14 as Pierre Zakrzewski films, just before the deadly attack.

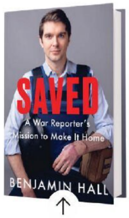

Emergency Evacuation

Chronicling His Journey
Saved: A War Reporter's Mission to Make It Home goes on sale March 14, the first anniversary of Hall's injuries.

Hall began reporting from war zones in 2007 as a freelancer before joining Fox News in 2015, traversing the globe to cover major conflicts in Syria, Iraq, Libya, Somalia and other high-conflict regions. Where there was an uprising, there was Hall, often embedded with rebels or inching toward the front line to get the full picture. "The only way you can really tell a good story is to be there," he says. His repeated brushes with danger were a source of exhilaration. Despite losing friends in the field and facing close calls, Hall always returned home safely.

Then his situation changed. In 2015 he married Alicia, a former elementary school classmate whom he had crossed paths with again in 2011, and they soon had their first child, Honor. "When I was single with no children before, there weren't so many people relying on you," he says. As they started their family, Benjamin and Alicia agreed he'd need to stop testing his luck on the front lines: "And that was the plan."

But when the Ukraine war started, Hall couldn't say no. And then on March 14, 2022, Hall's reporting team went dark while on assignment in Ukraine, where they had been since Feb. 26. "The whole day I just had this unusual sense of calm," Alicia, who was at home in London with the couple's daughters, recalls in her husband's memoir. "I tried him a few times and he didn't pick up, but I wasn't worried." Then the phone rang: It was Fox

To walk again, Hall relies on a variety of prosthetics and canes.

CAUGHT IN THE BLAST

In his memoir, Hall writes of the jarring moments after his Fox News team was attacked in Ukraine

The first explosion tore through a stand of pine-birch trees 20 feet in front of us, and we'd barely turned to look before the second bomb whistled overhead and landed right next to us and everything went dark.

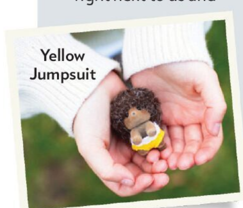

Not just dark—black. Deep, infinite blackness. A void in which no thought or awareness seemed possible. If I had the slightest hint of consciousness, it was a distant sense of shock waves, and the feeling that every part of my body—bones, organs, sinew, my soul—had been knocked out of me, leaving behind a useless husk.

I was all but dead.

But then—

—improbably, out of this crippling nothingness, a figure came through and I heard a familiar voice, as real as anything I'd ever known:

Daddy, you've got to get out of the car.

News CEO Suzanne Scott, informing her that her husband had been in an accident and his condition was unknown. "I thought, 'Oh my God. Oh no.' I was shocked and my heart just fell, but I also realized why the day had felt so calm. It was because I had a sense that change is coming." Alicia got off the call and held her composure long enough to get the girls to bed. "I didn't want to tell the girls anything until we knew for sure that he would be okay," she recalls. It would be weeks before she could fill them in on what had happened to their father.

As his loved ones and colleagues would learn, Hall was the sole survivor when a small vehicle carrying him and his crew drove through an abandoned town outside of Kyiv and into the path of Russian bombs. Veteran cameraman Pierre Zakrzewski (see box) and Ukrainian fixer Sasha Kuvshynova died on the road, along with two soldiers. Happenstance and goodwill saved Hall. A stranger discovered him among the rubble and rushed him to a hospital. A chain of Good Samaritans removed him from the war zone on the Polish prime minister's train, and eventually he arrived at a Texas military hospital for an anticipated two-year stay. Other than a brief visit when Alicia flew to Germany shortly after the accident, she decided to remain in London with their girls during his recovery. " 'No amount of hand-holding is going to get him through this. It has to come from him,' " she remembers thinking. "We have three children and they were our main responsibility. We had to divide and conquer."

Although he has made a few appearances on Fox News to discuss his recovery, Hall is not yet back to work. For now he's content to savor everyday joys. "In immense pain, I remember sometimes thinking I couldn't handle it anymore," Hall recalls of the lowest points in the past year. "I'd stop for a second and think of something amazing, like my daughters, or hold on to little Yellow Jumpsuit and realize that I could put away the bad and find the good." ●

"He was the best of men," Hall says of Pierre Zakrzewski, 55.

REMEMBERING A FRIEND: PIERRE ZAKRZEWSKI

Hall's memoir honors the life of his colleague, a storied war-zone photographer killed beside him

When I am alone, I think about Pierre, and I believe with all my heart that he laid down his life to save me. I was in the back of the red car, in the middle seat—the death seat. I should have been the first person killed in the attack. Yet somehow I was the one who made it out alive. How? Why? Pierre jumped out of the car first, clearing the way for me to narrowly escape. He tried to protect me to the very end, warning me about the Russians, looking out for me. He was brave and selfless to his last breath. That day, he saved my life.

Every day that I knew him, he made me a better human. He taught me how to find the beauty in the ugliest places, as well as the goodness amid the worst of humanity. He fought even harder to make people's lives better than those who fought to destroy life. I think about Pierre every day, and I hope he is still riding tall in his saddle, somewhere on a beautiful, untouched mountain.

40 Years After Dallas: Charlene Tilton

FINDING JOY AFTER HER PAINFUL PAST

AT THE HEIGHT OF HER FAME, SHE STRUGGLED IN SECRET TO HELP HER MENTALLY ILL MOTHER. TODAY THE STAR SAYS, 'I'VE HAD A TUMULTUOUS LIFE, BUT I'M AN OPTIMIST'

By EILEEN FINAN

Bright Side
"I try to see the good in people," says Tilton (in Nashville in February and, inset, as Lucy Ewing with the Dallas cast).

O

Charlene Tilton walks through the door of a Nashville restaurant, arms open wide. "Can I give you a hug?" she says, by way of greeting, before rapidly chitchatting about how Nashville has changed in the seven years she has lived there and which library has the best story time for her grandsons.

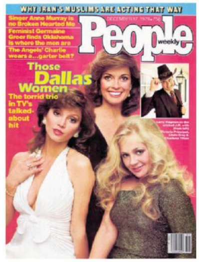

With her wide smile, Tilton still exudes effervescent Lucy Ewing charm, even without the voluminous golden locks that were her trademark as the iconic '80s darling on Dallas. But dressed in a green chenille sweater, skinny jeans and ankle boots that boost her petite 5′1½″ frame, the 64-year-old actress is now more stylish grandma than blonde bombshell—and that's just the way she wants it. "On Dallas it was such a whirlwind," she says. "The older I get, the more I've learned to be present in the day-to-day. I'm very content."

That sense of peace is welcome after a life that has been marked by profound turbulence. Her mother, Katherine, a secretary, became pregnant unexpectedly after meeting an Air Force pilot at the Pentagon, where they both worked at the time. "My biological father didn't want anything to do with me," Tilton says. "He had to have known about me—Dallas was so huge—but he never reached out."

While millions of Americans tuned in every Friday night for the glamour of Dallas, Tilton—who appeared on some 500 magazine covers at the height of her TV fame—kept her harrowing personal life a secret: Her mother struggled with severe mental illness and was eventually diagnosed with schizophrenia. "Back then mental illness wasn't talked about," says Tilton. "It was swept under the rug." Today, as she enjoys a quiet life in Tennessee with her daughter Cherish Lee, 40, and her grandsons (ages 6 and 2) nearby—and a revived career as a character actress—Tilton is eager to share her story: "Bringing things out in the open is so helpful."

Cover Star
Tilton's role on Dallas made her one of the most famous faces of the '80s, and her 1981 TV wedding drew 65 million viewers: "I look back now and go, 'I really was all that and a bag of chips!' I had no idea how beautiful I was. I didn't get it."

Tilton's earliest memories are of instability: her mother raging while someone repossessed their TV as Charlene watched Captain Kangaroo; being kicked off a train from their L.A. home to Omaha after her mom had a breakdown; police taking her mother away, leaving 5-year-old Charlene alone in a strange city; seeing her mother wrapped in a straitjacket. Movies were a rare escape. "Everything was magical onscreen," Tilton says. "I saw Julie Andrews in Mary Poppins and The Sound of Music and thought, 'I want her to be my mother.'"

After Katherine was institutionalized when her daughter was 5, Tilton shuffled between relatives and foster homes. In one home, "I remember the kids saying, 'When is she going to go?' and the parents said, 'We're trying to send her off, but we can't get anyone to take her.' I thought, 'I'm never going to depend on anybody to take care of me.'"

When Tilton was almost 8, her mother was released, and they moved back to California. But despite medication ("There were always a lot of pill bottles around"), her mom continued to struggle. Once when she chaperoned one of Tilton's junior high dances, "she started fighting with herself, having a full-on conversation," Tilton recalls. "I wanted to die of embarrassment." Their apartment was often filthy, and her mother refused to urinate in anything other than Tupperware containers: "That went on for years. I could never bring friends over."

Still a teen when she landed the part as J.R. Ewing's scheming niece in 1978, Tilton was already living on her own in L.A. after having moved out of her mother's squalid apartment. "A rat crawled across me one night, and I went, 'I can't live like this.'"

When Dallas took off, Tilton used her $15,000-per-week paycheck to try to help, but often her mother was out of reach. One day Tilton learned police had picked up her mother walking down a Hollywood street naked, but because she was deemed not a danger, she was released. Her mother would write "crazy" letters to the show's producers, but Tilton's costars had no idea what she was going through: "I was all about the work." Onscreen, Tilton felt a connection to her character Lucy, who was raised by her grandparents: "She was desperate to find the love of the parents she never had. I understood what made her tick."

Her own search for love led to her first marriage, at the age of 23, to country singer Johnny Lee, 12 years her senior, which lasted only two years. "The marriage was a disaster in the making," she says. "But we had a beautiful daughter." Cherish, born in 1982, "went with me everywhere," Tilton says. "I was a helicopter mom."

Family Joy
"Being with my grandkids is heaven on earth," says Tilton (in December 2021 with daughter Cherish and her grandsons, ages 6 and 2). "I read to them, take them to the library."

Screen Time
In her new film Heaven Sent (streaming now on Pure Flix), Tilton (with Karen Abercrombie) plays a matchmaking friend.

in 1990, "there was a lot of stress. I wasn't working, and I wasn't taking care of myself." Instead, she cared for her daughter and her mom, who later moved into a live-in facility, but the cost drained Tilton's savings. "My house was foreclosed. I left everything except what we could fit in a one-bedroom house."

After her mother died in 2001, she started dating cinematographer Cheddy Hart and taking on some small roles. But in 2009, when the two were engaged, he died suddenly of heart failure, plunging her into a dark period. "I just sat on the couch drinking and smoking cigarettes," she says. A friend's involvement with Actors for Autism inspired her to volunteer. "I fell in love with the students," she says. "To get out of your own depression or grief, you go help somebody."

When her daughter moved to Nashville to pursue music, it opened an opportunity for Tilton as well. Now she splits her time between her grandsons and acting, mostly in TV movies or for faith-based streaming services. "When I was on Dallas and doing bathing suit magazine covers, I couldn't wait to get older," she says. "I always saw myself as a character actress. I'm petite and curvy, not tall and thin. I'm not elegant, I'm spunky. What I love about the age I am now is it brings different characters."

'I CAN FIND THE HUMOR AND IRONY IN ANYTHING'
—CHARLENE TILTON

She has also made peace with her childhood after discovering about two years ago through a DNA test that she has three half siblings who, like her, had never met their biological father. When they finally tracked him down, they learned he'd died six months earlier at the age of 93. Still, "I don't carry a chip on my shoulder. I don't get into self-pity. I see the bright side of things, and that's served me well during tumultuous times."

RISING STARS JASMIN SAVOY BROWN, JENNA ORTEGA, MELISSA BARRERA AND MASON GOODING TALK FEARS AND FRIENDSHIP

By NIGEL SMITH

The stars of Scream VI—Jasmin Savoy Brown, Jenna Ortega, Melissa Barrera and Mason Gooding—got so close while filming the latest installment of the slasher series that they almost got matching tattoos. That is, until Gooding got cold feet. "All of a sudden he got picky," says Barrera, 32, who previously starred in the movie musical In the Heights. But when the castmates reunited in New York City on March 5, Gooding, 26, hinted he might have a change of heart. "If you have a tattoo gun anywhere, I'd love to get one now," jokes the Booksmart actor and son of Cuba Gooding Jr.

The Scream franchise's first five movies have scared up $744 million at the box office worldwide over 27 years. Playing two pairs of siblings in peril from the masked Ghostface killer in last year's Scream alongside original cast members Neve Campbell and Courteney Cox continued to boost the four young stars' flourishing careers. Ortega, 20, scored a solo megahit last fall, playing Wednesday Addams in the Netflix series Wednesday. Brown, 28, who also stars in the acclaimed Showtime drama Yellowjackets, says that Scream's so-called "core four" have formed an unbreakable bond: "We love each other."

SCREAM THROUGH THE YEARS!

Scream* (1996)
Neve Campbell and Rose McGowan starred as high school students terrorized by a masked killer dubbed Ghostface in the classic that started it all.

Scream 2* (1997)
David Arquette's Dewey Riley and Courteney Cox's news reporter Gale Weathers tracked down a copycat killer on a college campus.

Scream 3* (2000)
Cox's Gale Weathers teamed with Parker Posey, an actress playing Weathers in a movie called Stab 3, to find a new Ghostface menacing Hollywood.

Scream 4* (2011)
Ten years after the third installment, Hayden Panettiere (who returns for Scream VI) and Emma Roberts joined the cast in the fictional town of Woodsboro.

Scream* (2022)
"I pushed myself as far as I could go," says Ortega (with Ghostface). "I went home, and my voice was a little raspier that day from screaming."

In Scream VI Jenna and Melissa play sisters while Mason and Jasmine play twins. But offscreen it seems like you all share a family bond.

MASON GOODING Absolutely. It really did feel like a summer camp. I used to go to summer camp with my brother, and it was nice to have someone to look out for me. And that's what they do for me every day—check in and make sure I'm okay.

JENNA ORTEGA I feel like we're unusually comfortable with each other, probably too much.

MELISSA BARRERA [To Ortega] Do you remember in the last movie when an extra asked us if we were actually sisters, and we both went, "Yeah?"

What was your reaction when you heard the movie was going to take place in New York City?

BARRERA It was a big statement to move the franchise across the country for the first time. It says a lot about how brutal Ghostface is—that it would follow them all the way to the big city. Horror movies are the kind of movies where you always talk to the screen, you're like, "Why are you being so dumb? Why are you going in that door? Why are you going down the stairs? If you're so scared of Ghostface, why don't you just go somewhere else?" And these characters were like, "We're getting out of here." And the fact that they can't get away from Ghostface says a lot about how scary this movie is.

ORTEGA I love the city. I would love to move here. I also feel like I go around my day-to-day life, and I could be walking through a grocery store, walking down the street and think "Man, I wonder how many people around me are serial killers." In this film, it's an actual guess. So that's really interesting for me.

What did you enjoy most about working with Courteney Cox on the last Scream and this one?

BARRERA She's one of the sweetest people in the business. You know how they say never meet your heroes? She is the exception to that rule. She's even better than you'd think. She's more lovable and funnier and more generous. She was like a mama hen who would want us to all hang out and cook for us.

GOODING We had dinner parties.

ORTEGA She goes out of her way.

JASMIN SAVOY BROWN And it's genuine. She checks on us. She checks on me every month to ask how things are going in my personal life, seeing if I need any advice.

When was the first time you saw a Scream movie?

ORTEGA I was maybe 13 or 14. I was trying to get into horror films.

BROWN On the set of our movie I watched Scream for the first time. I'd never seen it.

GOODING Mine was the first Scream after an agreement with my father. I wanted this really scary, violent videogame called Dead Space. So he put on Scream and said if I sat through the whole thing, he would buy me Dead Space. I did it. And I love that game even to this day.

BARRERA I was obsessed with horror movies when I was 10, 11 years old. Sleepovers at friends' houses, watching R-rated horror movies was the thing, because I wasn't allowed to watch them. I remember watching Scream, Final Destination and I Know What You Did Last Summer—all of those were the first introduction into horror.

How many Scream movies would you come back to do?

GOODING Scream 1,000 seems fair—if it's with the same people.

BARRERA If you guys are in it and [directors] Matt [Bettinelli-Olpin] and Tyler [Gillett] are in it. Yeah, no question for me.

BROWN This is the dream. ●

The four stars are joined by Dermot Mulroney (far left) and Hayden Panettiere in Scream VI. "I have the Ghostface mask on a mannequin head in my house," says Barrera. "When my guests come, they get so freaked out."

A Selling Sunset Couple's Luxe L.A. Condo

JASON OPPENHEIM AND GIRLFRIEND MARIE-LOU NURK SETTLE INTO THEIR NEW SKY-HIGH LOVE NEST

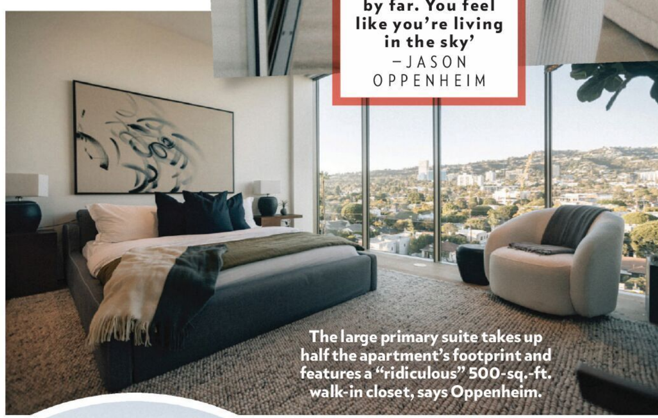

'I've lived in many beautiful places, but this is my favorite by far. You feel like you're living in the sky'
—JASON OPPENHEIM

Jason Oppenheim deals in some of the most opulent real estate in the country, so a property has to be something spectacular to make his jaw drop. The 5,500-sq.-ft. Los Angeles condo the Selling Sunset star shares with his girlfriend, German model Marie-Lou Nurk, is just that.

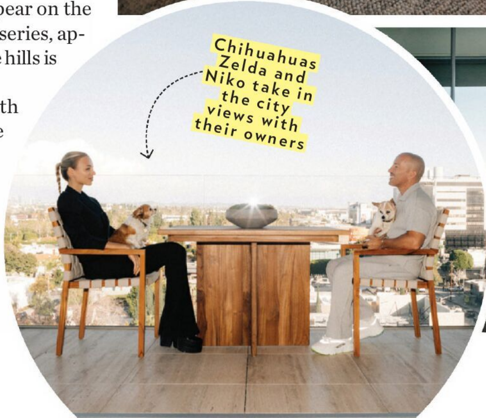

"I'm always looking [at homes], but I never thought I would live in something this nice or this expensive," admits Oppenheim, 45. The three-bedroom unit was listed last year for $18 million, making it one of the most expensive condos for sale in L.A. in 2022, he says. Nurk, 25, who has been dating Oppenheim for seven months and will appear on the next season of the Netflix series, approves too. "The view of the hills is insane," she says.

Although the space, with 12-ft. ceilings and a private movie theater, is hard to top, Oppenheim says there is only one spot finer: "The $50 million penthouse right above us. And it's not even that much better."

—MACKENZIE SCHMIDT and LANAE BRODY

The large primary suite takes up half the apartment's footprint and features a "ridiculous" 500-sq.-ft. walk-in closet, says Oppenheim.

GET A GLOW LIKE ALBA'S

This all-in-one hybrid from Jessica Alba's clean-beauty empire "moisturizes, protects and perfects." We like it for what's added—soothing allantoin—and what's left out: phthalates, synthetic fragrances and harsh chemical sunscreens.

quick tip! For fluffy, light mashed potatoes, place the raw, cut potatoes in a pot of cold water to rinse off excess starch. Change the water a few times until it runs clear.

PADMA LAKSHMI

Turkey Shepherd's Pie

'It's a cozy dish that's even better the next day. It's both filling and comforting,' says Lakshmi, who was inspired to put her spin on the classic English meal after filming the new season of Bravo's Top Chef: World All-Stars in London

- 2 lbs. russet potatoes, peeled and cut into 1-in. cubes (5 cups)
- ⅓ cup whole milk
- ¼ cup unsalted butter
- 2½ tsp. kosher salt, divided
- 1 tsp. black pepper, divided
- 2 Tbsp. canola oil
- 1 cup chopped yellow onion (from 1 small onion)
- 1 large garlic clove, minced
- 1½ lb. ground turkey
- 1 tsp. chopped fresh thyme
- 1 tsp. chopped fresh rosemary
- ½ tsp. crushed red pepper
- ¼ cup tomato paste
- ½ cup hot water
- 1 tsp. Worcestershire sauce

1. Place potatoes in a large saucepan, and cover with cold water. Cover, then bring to a boil over high heat, about 5 minutes. Once boiling, uncover and reduce heat to medium; cook until potatoes are tender, about 10 minutes. Drain water from saucepan; add milk, butter, 1½ teaspoon salt and ½ teaspoon pepper. With a potato masher, mash until smooth and fluffy, 2 to 3 minutes.
2. While potatoes cook, preheat oven to 400°. Heat canola oil in a large skillet over medium-high heat. Add onion; cook, stirring often, until softened, 3 to 4 minutes. Add garlic; cook, stirring constantly, 1 minute. Add turkey; cook, stirring to crumble, until browned, about 5 minutes. Stir in thyme, rosemary, crushed red pepper and remaining 1 teaspoon salt and ½ teaspoon pepper; cook 1 minute. Dissolve tomato paste in hot water; stir into mixture along with Worcestershire sauce. Reduce heat to low; simmer, uncovered, until thickened and liquid is absorbed, 6 to 8 minutes.
3. Spread turkey mixture evenly in an 11x7-inch baking dish. Top with mashed potatoes, sealing around edges to prevent mixture from bubbling over. Bake in preheated oven until potatoes are light golden brown, about 25 minutes.

ROSANNA &
ELAINA SCOTTO

Ravioli With Brown Butter & Sage Sauce

The sisters share one of their family's favorite weeknight dinners from their cookbook Meatballs, Mangia & Memories. The 10-minute recipe 'is full of flavor—a little bit sweet and savory—and is so satisfying on a cold night,' says Rosanna

- 2 (10-oz.) pkg. refrigerated cheese-filled ravioli
- ¾ cup (6 oz.) unsalted butter
- 1 garlic clove, smashed and chopped
- ¼ cup coarsely chopped fresh sage leaves (from 1 [.5-oz.] pkg.)
- ½ tsp. kosher salt
- ½ tsp. black pepper

Fresh lemon juice (optional)

1. Cook ravioli in a pot of salted boiling water according to package directions.
2. Meanwhile melt butter in a medium saucepan over medium-low heat. Once butter is fully melted, continue to cook for an additional 3 minutes, stirring occasionally (butter will be bubbly). Add garlic and sage; cook, stirring constantly, until butter has turned light brown and has a rich, nutty aroma, 2 to 4 minutes longer. Remove from heat, and transfer sauce to a large bowl to keep it from burning. Sprinkle with salt and pepper; add a dash of lemon juice, if desired.
3. Drain ravioli, and add to bowl with sauce; toss until evenly coated. Serve immediately.
Serves: 4 Active time: 10 minutes
Total time: 10 minutes

Make Better Brown Butter

Gentle heat and a watchful eye are keys to this one-ingredient wonder

Cut Small Pieces

Chop the butter into 1-inch chunks rather than using a whole stick. It'll help the butter melt and heat more evenly in the pan. Cook over medium-low heat or low only.

Stir and Scrape

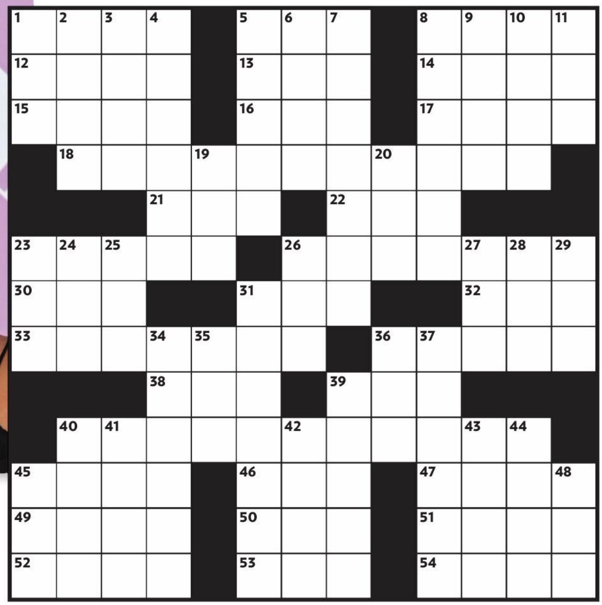

After the butter melts and heats up, it will begin to bubble and splatter as the water evaporates. When you stir, scrape the bottom and sides of the pan to avoid burning.

Watch It Brown

When it begins to foam, stir the butter constantly to prevent the milk solids from sticking and scorching. It's browning when dark flecks form and it begins to smell nutty and toasty.

It's about damn time! Lizzo performed a concert at the Mercedes-Benz Arena in Berlin on Feb. 28. The Grammy winner sported a lime-green "supersuit" from her shapewear line Yitty, while her backup dancers, who call themselves the Big Grrrls, rocked the stage behind her. Lizzo: The Special Tour will run through July, when the singer will wrap up her extended road trip with a finale in Luxembourg.

THE ACTOR, 59, STARS IN THE NEW SLASHER SEQUEL SCREAM 6

Last time I sang out loud
I'm now singing in a country duo with my brother Kieran. We rent out a little studio for $30 an hour and rehearse once or twice a week. We haven't really arrived at a name yet, so stay tuned.

Last perfect day off
I went with my kid to the When We Were Young music festival in Las Vegas. We stayed all day and night and saw the most incredible acts. I've been smiling ever since.

Last person I was mistaken for Sometimes it's Robert Downey Jr. Especially if I have a goatee and I'm wearing a beanie—that's when people think I look like Tony Stark.

Last impulse buy
I had to impulsively lease a new car because a couple months ago I opened my car door and someone took it off. I'm just glad I hadn't started to get out yet. Holy crap.

Last injury
I was in a scene [on American Horror Story] where I didn't have shoes on and [costar] Billy Eichner's boot broke my toe. I was already screaming, so I just used the agony. This will be him learning about it—I guarantee he doesn't know.
